Sented by Winn delegates in the district convention.

This is a bitter disappointment to Winn. Had he remained in the democratic party he would have been renominated and re-elected. He sacrificed his future with democracy and now the third party has gone back on him. The executive committee got the impression that the mountaineers distrusted Winn's fidelity to his new faith. They have accused him, too, of jumping over at a late hour because he thought his chances would be better with the third party.

ALABAMA'S DIVIDED DEMOCRACY.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 23, 1892. The question of Kolb's contesting the election of Gov. Jones and the regular democratic state ticket has again come to the front.

All along since the election Kolb and his lieutenants have boasted that the Kolb ticket received a majority of the votes cast at the state election, but was counted out by Jones' managers. They have charged fraud right and left and even asserted that Jones, as they alleged, being elected by fraud should not accept.

None of the governor's friends and supporters has ever thought that he was fraudulently elected. Meanwhile, though it has been twentythree days since the election was held, the Kolbites have still cried fraud and have wrought up more or less feeling among the ignorant classes, many of whom believe their extravagant esti-Gov. the female loveliness with which this place abounds. When off duty it is a common sight to see the soldier boys with charming young ladies on their arms patroling the hotel piazzas, the avenues, board walk and company streets. The ladies seem to be very much taken with the beauty of the camp, and to hear the remarks of admiration that fall from their lips has a tendency toward making the fortunate decupants feel very vain. Every one has a pleasant word for the boys; they are fast making friends by their gentlemanly behavior and soldierly bear-ing, so that when the time comes to break camp and turn their faces homeward there will be heard expressions of sorrow on all sides.

At a special meeting of the city council held last evening. Messrs. Akins, Doak, Foster, Henry,
